Hi, Wesberg;

Sept 16, 1991

Just a conversational aside while anticipating a response.
I just discovered this interesting article in a magazine; thought it would provide some refreshing amusement for you.

I don't know what volumes of your books you have remaining. (Hopefully they would have all been sold already.) It was daring and adventuresome of you to go into publishing. Not too many wives would go along with that, either. Apparently, I have all of your books. Perhaps I can lobby the village library for a full set, perhaps somewhat piecemeal.
One thing that AARC can do (for everyone) is — and no reason why it shouldn't — maintain a bibliography of subject books, stating publishers, names and addresses and availability, especially as a first time service to new members. Especially in anticipation of a forthcoming film ("In the Triad ...") AARC should do something like that.
That's about it for now.

(P.S. About that book I recommended for intellectual exercise and amusement without some knowledge of school-geometry ... and some physics, it would be easy to prejudicially make a conclusion — at the beginning or after having finished it. With such a background or experiential capability, the book is a real challenge. I wouldn't have recommended any other one. Beliefs are irrelevant.)

You're lucky you don't suffer with a frozen shoulder! Mine is exasperating and many months old.
